INTRODUCTION TO ORDER BOOK MATERIAL

by HENRY L. MITCHELL, JR.

The following lists of Brunswick County officials and officers were extracted from the Court Order Books, numbers one through thirty-four, and cover a span of roughly one hundred years. All names are recorded exactly as the Clerk of the Court has recorded them although many discrepancies on the spelling of last names were quite obvious. Those wishing to look up the exact reference to an entry of a particular name in the Order Books can do so by referring to the notes retained in the Brunswick-Greensville Regional Library, Lawrenceville, Virginia.

Court Justices were appointed to their positions for life, until they resigned, or in some cases, were forced from office due to misconduct, which was rare. The number of Gentlemen Justices varied in number from ten to nearly forty. They were the most powerful and influential officials in the county government; their duties were varied and numerous, ranging from attending court to assessing the estates of the deceased. They were responsible for the yearly selection of all other appointed officials and those recommended to the Governor for appointment.

Surveyors were by far the most numerous of appointed officials. The total number of court appointed surveyors numbers in the thousands, to the point where a man, if he could be nothing else, could always be a surveyor. His responsibilities, however, were stringently defined by the court and failure to perform assigned duties could result in a very stiff fine and removal from office. Surveyors were usually appointed for one year at a time. Also indicated in the list of surveyors are the County and Deputy County Surveyor.

Constables, like the surveyors, were appointed as needed and by the Court Justices. Records show that constables were assigned to duty in areas in which they lived, both north and south of the Meherrin. Beginning in 1808, constables were appointed to the upper and lower battalions of the 96th and 66th regiments of the Virginia Militia. They were empowered to "execute warrants on individuals residing within their districts as at present laid off on the public square in Lawrenceville at the Court House." (Order Book 33, p. 298.)

Sheriffs and Undersheriffs, or Deputies, were appointed for one year at a time. The Justices would recommend three candidates for sheriff to the Governor of Virginia, who then designated the proper man to hold the office. The Sheriff was then allowed to choose his own deputies. Besides law enforcement, the sheriff and his deputies were also responsible for collecting the county levies each year.

Miscellaneous County Officials includes attorneys, treasurers, keepers of weights and measures, inspector of the flour, coroners, and other important and minor officials. Two short-lived positions were that of the head borough, a minor law officer, and an escheator, one who confiscated property from heirs or owners who were unable legally to hold on to it. Not listed are appointed jailers and custodians of the courthouse, also yearly positions. Attorneys had to be licensed by the county court. Prosecutors were appointed by the King through the colonial governor and after independence was achieved, by the Virginia governor alone.

Militia Officers were also recommended to the governor by the Court Justices, a practice utilized from Colonial days until after the Civil War, as late as 1866. Except in the cases of Field Grade Officers of Colonel, Lieutenant Colonel, and Major, a militia officer is listed only once, when he was first commissioned. Many colonial militiamen went on to serve during the Revolution and for some years after the war. Their names may appear twice, as do those that were retained once Brunswick's militia was designated as the 96th and 66th Regiments of the Virginia Militia in August of 1794. In September of 1799, a cavalry unit was formed and by April, 1802, an artillery company was formed. An independent infantry unit was formed in September, 1811.

There are some obvious gaps in the Order Books, probably because of the three moves of the Brunswick Courthouse and the fact that during colonial times the Court Clerk kept all records in his home rather than at a depository. The most obvious void spans the years from July, 1742 to December, 1744. Other small gaps, exclusively during the harsh winter months of December, January and February can be attributed to the weather's rendering court day impossible.

In the beginning of Brunswick's County Court system in June, 1732, an unusual practice was followed. The Court year did not correspond to the calendar year, but ran instead from April through the following March, thus there was a time lag of three months. This practice was discontinued in March, 1750. There is no obvious reason for this procedure.

TUCK-HITE-WILKINS FAMILY CEMETERY
Located off Hwy. 602 across from North Fork Baptist, this ancient cemetery contains at least thirty graves marked only with fieldstones, six of which were partially legible. Entries in brackets are thought to also be in this cemetery in unmarked graves, but no positive proof can be made.
